

HAPPY Valentine's DAY

MARK'S MEMO

Excellence 360

It frustrated her. One little shrub had died. She replaced it. Then it died again. Now Katie had a short window of time to replace it before her next inspection.

Katie managed a store for an organization that operated multiple locations. To maintain quality across all its properties, the organization implemented inspections—inspections with metrics that affected Katie's bonus. It worked. Standards improved. Curb appeal increased. At least, in the areas that were measured.

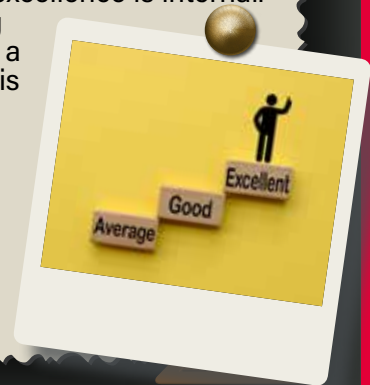

While visiting her store, I noticed dead leaves on the porch. Not once, but multiple times. I guessed the inspection report didn't include a grade for dead leaves. So they became a "when I get to it" task rather than an "I need this done now" priority. I know the feeling. I have two dead shrubs myself. They've already been replaced once and didn't survive. A third attempt feels like a waste. And since there's no bonus tied to my landscaping, I haven't made it a priority.

The statement "You only improve what you measure" holds true. But there's an even greater principle, quoted by David Salyers' "Second Mile Service" concept: "Focus on the '10% more effort' to create 'wow' moments, and results will far exceed expectations."

Measuring sticks can drive excellence, but the best motivator for excellence is internal. Inspections make us aim for a passing grade, but wouldn't an unrelenting desire for excellence produce more comprehensive results? One caution: a relentless pursuit of perfection can turn us into naggers—and what good is perfection if it makes us (and those around us) miserable?

Excellence in life is a 360° endeavor. It includes our work, our thoughts, and our relationships. Input from others is valuable, but excellence reaches its highest form when it springs from an internal drive—not external pressure. Because when excellence becomes who we are—not what we're graded on—it changes everything.

IN THE SPOTLIGHT

Spotlighting deer is illegal in many states. It gives poachers an advantage because deer freeze in bright light. Their pupils are widely dilated to capture as much light as possible in low-light conditions, and when they encounter sudden bright lights, they freeze. As a youngster, I was with an older relative who used a spotlight to spot deer. He wasn't a poacher, only a sightseer.

This freezing is one of the causes of so many vehicle-deer crashes at night. Well, there's also the deer's inability to calculate the speed of a car in comparison to the
