

THE LENTEN SEASON

MARK'S MEMO

A Pocketful of What Matters

No batteries. No updates. A pocketknife lives quietly in one's pocket, warms to the body, and collects scratches that mark the day. It symbolizes individualism—a small reminder of self-reliance and personal competence. With it, one feels ready to step into unexplored areas. Of course, that may be overstating things. A raging bear requires something bigger. But still, the thought lingers: When I've got my pocketknife, I'm ready for life.

As our sales manager, Matt Keeler, sorted through items from his father-in-law Junior's estate, he found a pocketknife stamped with the name Eyster's Harvesting Company. It brought back the stories Junior told about his years on a harvesting crew—starting in Texas in early summer and ending the season in Montana. At home, Junior was mostly a hobby farmer with forty acres and small equipment. But on the harvest, he lived the dream, running the big machines. Big equipment made big memories, including the pocketknife his boss gave him at the end of one season.

Matt figured memories like that shouldn't be sold at an estate auction. "We'll hang onto it," he decided. After all, a pocketknife never outlives its usefulness, and it barely takes up any space in a drawer. And that's where it stayed—for a time.

He also remembered conversations with teammate and driver Dave Barkman, who had worked the harvest with Junior years earlier. So Matt asked Dave if he was interested in the pocketknife. Dave explained that he had also been given a knife like that, but TSA confiscated it on his flight home. Matt didn't hesitate. "I want you to have my father-in-law's," he said.

Dave was stunned.

A pocketknife may symbolize rugged individualism, but in the end, we're each just a tree in a much larger story—a forest connected by shared memories, gifts, and grace.

Inspiration from God's Word.

Spotlighting deer is illegal in many states. It gives poachers an advantage because deer freeze in bright light. Their pupils are widely dilated to capture as much light as possible in low-light conditions, and when they encounter sudden bright lights, they freeze. As a youngster, I was with an older relative who used a spotlight to spot deer. He wasn't a poacher, only a sightseer.
